

Short Biography

Dr. Nouf Alsaheil, MBA, Ph.D., is an Assistant Professor in the Health Administration Department at the College of Business Administration, King Saud University. She holds a Ph.D. in Public Health Policy and Management from Kent State University (2023), an MBA from the University of Akron (2013), and a bachelor's degree in business administration from King Saud University (2007). Dr. Alsaheil's expertise encompasses health policy, systems management, and leadership, with research interests focused on patient satisfaction, public health interventions, and decision-making.

Dr. Alsaheil has extensive teaching experience, having served as an instructor at both King Saud University and Kent State University, where she actively contributed to various academic committees. She has presented her research at prominent international conferences, including the American Public Health Association Annual Meeting, and has earned awards such as the Outstanding Presenter Award at the Kent State University Graduate Research Symposium and the People's Choice Award at the Public Health Combined Conference. In addition to her academic role, she holds certifications in qualitative research and mental health first aid. Outside academia, Dr. Alsaheil is passionate about exploring advancements in public health practices and their diverse applications within communities. In her personal time, she enjoys walking, traveling, trying new experiences, and staying active through outdoor activities like hiking and gardening. These hobbies provide her with a balanced lifestyle and inspire fresh perspectives that she brings into her professional work.